Subject: Comment on Docket #02-278, Rules and Regulations Implementing the Telephone Consumer Protection Act of 1991.

By: Troy Cobb

I am very pleased to know that the do-not-call act will be implemented soon. As a US citizen and a consumer I to may add my name to the registry. However I do have concerns regarding the process that the FTC is mandating the FCC to endure.

I would like to make it known that the US consumer should have more protection and freedom than that of telemarketers whom constantly harass and solicit for new business. The FCC can maximize consistency of the FTC's rules by using a randomly generated sample of the population on the registry and having this done quarterly until the next review. The subject matter and research findings should be presented to the FTC and the consumers on the registry. The act should prove to be successful regardless of the outcomes and findings. In my opinion the FTC is pressuring to my rules on the FCC for this act.

The bottom line is if a consumer wants to block-out telemarketers they should have that freedom, especially in this day and time. The process shouldn't be bogged down by rules and regulations on faceless/heartless businesses.
